Welcome to the 21st Century

By Alex G. Malloy

If ever in the history of the comic industry, the industry itself was in need of a drastic overhaul this is it. Just as Stan Lee, Jack Kirby, Steve Ditko, and the rest of the fledgling Marvel Comics revitalized the industry back in the early 1960s; the direct sales market revitalized it in the 1970s, and the radical approach of Image, Malibu, and the concept of creator/owner comics revitalized it in the 1980s, the industry once more needs a serious shot in the arm. Sure, sure, the industry is still limping along, and there are still many bright spots, but overall, we need a major revitalization. No longer can we simply go along the way we've been going for the past several years. Mike Gold, the subject of our feature interview discusses that at length in this volume.

Yes, we understand that last year (2000) gave us the huge smash hit X-Men movie, which set new standards for comic book movies, and we further understand that 2001 and beyond promises us not only the long-awaited Spider-Man movie (although sans James "Terminator, Titanic" Cameron in the director's chair and with Tobey Maguire as Peter Parker/Spider-Man), but also Batman Year 1. We also know that Mirimax has optioned numerous Marvel characters, including another Blade flick once again starring Wesley Snipes.)

Of course we know all of those things. But we still insist that comic books themselves are desperately in need of salvation. As we close out the 20th century, word on the street is that Marvel Comics will run out of money before the end of the year. (As we go to press well before that, Marvel just might be out of business before we hit the shelves. A darn shame if it occurs). Feature editor Robert J. Sodaro indicated to us that in a previous conversation with Mike Gold they discussed the very real possibility of a world without Spider-Man, a concept that Sodaro, by his own admission, a major Spider-fan, had trouble accepting. Gold countered that an earlier generation could have made the same comment about Zorro, The Lone Ranger, Doc Savage, Tarzan, Sherlock Holmes or a number of other literary icons.

Well, perhaps it is time that we all get our heads around that concept. Part of this is because of what the disastrous gold-foil alternate covers of the last decade have done to this industry. We spent far too much time, energy, and effort paying more attention to the packaging of comics than to the substance. This resulted in the former powerhouse of Marvel Comics being so desperate for a movie franchise that it virtually signed away all licensing rights to the X-Men movie, in order to cut a deal to get the film made. According to all reliable sources, none (or very little) of the profits resulting from the licensing rights to the movie went back into the house of ideas itself. Thus, while the film itself made a metric ton of dough, Marvel Comics' publishing division made nil.

As for the rest of the field; it consists of DC (which has a couple of Batman films in the works), Image, Dark Horse, and a pileup of small publishers. We personally believe that the industry will survive (with or without Marvel), and that there will always be comic books to sit down, read, and enjoy. While we are not certain who the players will be, or what genre will emerge or remain, or even what form the comics themselves will take, we know that comic books themselves are still a viable form of entertainment, and will continue well into this new century.

As always, we'd like to thank those people who have helped us get this far, the various publishers, creators, and fans who publish, create, and read comics; our own publishers at Krause; editor Stuart Wells, III (who laid the entire thing out and is the keeper of our archives), feature editor Robert J. Sodaro, featured guest Mike Gold, and everyone else who had a hand in getting this latest volume of CVA into your hands.

To Infinity and Beyond... the Future of Comics

An interview with Mike Gold

By Robert J. Sodaro

There are probably many people reading this who have no idea who Mike Gold is, or why he rates either a feature interview in CVA or at the very least an interview of this length. Then there are people who may know who he is, and his contribution to the field, but are still fuzzy about some of his background. Did you know that not only does he have a deep commitment to youth education, and social services, but that he co-created the National Runaway Switchboard? How about that he once helped smuggle letters from POWs in 1969 out of Vietnam and to the U.S. press? Or even that he worked for Abbie Hoffman and the infamous Chicago Seven? (Even this interviewer, who has known him for several years, and has interviewed him a number of times didn't know that last one.)

Still, it has been his many accomplishments to the field of comics that has landed him this slot. These include helping to found and establish the direct sales market, co-founding First Comics with its innovative approach to publishing, his work as a senior editor at DC, and as a retailer working with the ill-fated Dream Factory chain of comic shops. But rather than us expounding at length about his many accomplishments, we're going to let him do that.

Bob Sodaro: Let's start off with something easy. How did you get into comics?

Mike Gold: That's an interesting question. I actually started out doing some consulting work for some of the retailers in the Midwest, primarily in Chicago, and in the general Midwest area. This was at the very outset of the direct sales business. It was when Phil Seuling started up his distribution company, but he only had DC. Marvel hadn't jumped in on it yet, and I was helping to promote some of theses stores and comics as a hobby throughout the media primarily in the Midwest, but also nationally.

Bob: You hail from Chicago, don't you?

Mike: Oh yeah, sure. Really, at the time, I was both a writer — as in writing for publications that would ostensibly pay me — and broadcaster where I did get paid. I was on radio in Chicago for seven years, and I was doing a lot of work in the youth social services field. I had worked in doing communication and education work for drug-abuse prevention program. I co-created the National Runaway Switchboard program. That was sort of the day job. Back in those days I didn't like sleeping, I think. The comic book thing happened sort of organically. By helping some of these guys promote their stores and helping the hobby be promoted both locally and nationally, that sort of got me into the early days of the direct sales market, as my sort of coercing retailers into getting involved. I thought that it was a good thing, and thought it would help establish the hobby. From there I, and a number of other people, worked on creating the Chicago ComiCon.

Bob: What year was this?

Mike: The first ComicCon was in '76. So, I started working on that in '75. I had already been working with these retailers for several years before that. I can point out that I had also done some freelance work for newspaper syndicates before that as well, for newspaper comic strips, as opposed to comic books. My actual real start was in 1965 (five or six — I think it was '65), working as sort of an intern for the old National Newspaper Syndicate working on Buck Rogers, among other thing. That's how I really got my start. So it all kind of grew organically from there. But again, we started up the Chicago ComicCon in '75, very early '76, like Feb. '76, we were looking around for guests of honor. We had Harvey Kurtzman and Stan Lee lined up for our first Chicago ComicCon, and Jenette Kahn was just made Publisher at DC. I knew Jenette from my work in the Social Services field — because one of the magazines that she was publishing for Scholastic Press really jumped on the National Runway Switchboard program that I had co-created. She gave us a lot of promotion and publicity. I worked very closely with one of their editor/writers, and Jenette and I got to know each other through that. So when she became publisher at DC I was first astonished. Wow, this woman I know from Scholastic is the publisher at DC. So I called her up, and I congratulated her, and I invited her to become our third guest of honor at the first Chicago ComicCon. She and I just started talking, and within about three or four weeks of conversation — taking time out for meals and naps and stuff — she had me come out to New York because Neal Adams was looking for somebody to be sort of a manager of Continuity Associates. I was really ambivalent about that. I had known Neal from the Organic Theater Days (from Stuart Gordon's Organic Theater, which is a theater company that had produced the play Warp).

Bob: Yeah, I was going to say, didn't you work on Warp?

Mike: Yeah I did work on the Organic Theater, but I didn't work on Warp. I was a fanboy with Warp.

Bob: I still have a Warp poster.

Mike: I had a number of friends who were actors, and a number of friends of mine were involved in the Organic Theater, and a couple of them were in Warp. This is around 1971, and that's where I met Neal. It's not that I didn't like Neal, of course like most comic fans at the time, I worshiped Neal.

Bob: Of course, who didn't? (Neal Adams was the subject of CVA*'s 1996 cover feature interview* — ed.) Neal was our Eric Clapton, as it were.

Mike: Yeah, I think that's true. I think that's very true.

Bob: It's probably still true.

Mike: I wasn't really keen on the idea of moving to New York and working in a business capacity for Continuity Associates, but I figured, "What the Hell?" Jenette was nice enough to invite me out, and the fanboy in me wanted to take the tour of DC Comics, and physically meet Jenette. Our entire relationship at that point was over the telephone. I flew out to New York, and Neal didn't show up for the lunch. So Jenette and I wound up having a three-or four-hour conversation at Charley O's. (At that time there was only one Charley O's, in New York.) We were sort of scaring people around us because, for four hours, we were talking passionately about comics — where it should be and where it's been — what it means, and how to fix it all, you know. I had a swell time and I flew back to Chicago having had a swell day. The next day Jenette calls up and says, "You know, I don't think I want you to work for Neal." And I'm thinking, OK (laughter), I mean, I wasn't really keen on the idea anyway. She says, "I want you to work for me." Ah, whole other thing, now. Now I'm all of a sudden offered a job at DC Comics. So, I was, as they say in the business, "between radio jobs."

Bob: I know a guy in radio who says he was "de-hired" from a radio station.

Mike: Oh yeah, when it happens it's the best thing in the world. (Laughter) It's not a job that carries a lot of security.

Bob: Having sometimes worked in radio, or rather having not worked in radio sometimes myself, I know exactly what you mean by that.

Mike: Sure. But, since this was a period of time when I was really lucky to have still been able to do free-form radio as long as I had. I started in 1969, this is now 1976. I had pretty much left my own free will the radio station I had been working for because they went into rigid play lists, and I didn't want to do that. So I didn't have a radio job to keep me in Chicago, I was still doing work with the Runaway program with a few social services agencies, and freelance writing you can do anywhere; if you can do it at all (laughter).

Bob: Which we've proven that you

Mike: Well, there are good days and bad days. So I figured, what the heck, maybe I should try this thing. It fulfills a fanboy dream and working for Warner Communications was kind of a cool idea, or seemed like a cool idea at the time.

Bob: I'm sure that in the mid-1970s it was a cool idea.

Mike: So in '76 I went out there, and pretty much my job at that time was to increase DC's presence in the direct sales market. Which was obvious because I knew a lot about it having increased the retailer's presence in the direct sales market over the past several years. And Jenette had really liked that first Chicago ComicCon and all that. I had already taken this job at that point. That's really how I got into the comic book business. Oh, incidentally, 10 years earlier, I sort of had that brush with the comic strip business.

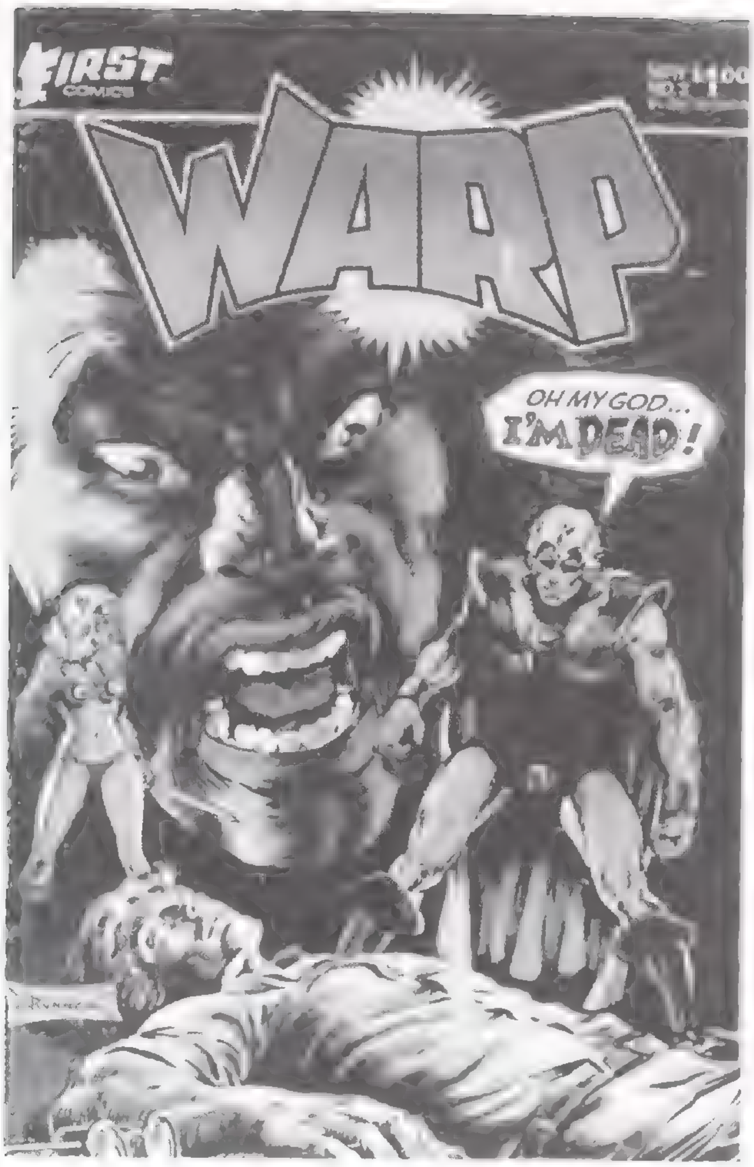
Bob: Was it then that you worked in an editorial capacity at DC or was that later on?

Mike: That was later on. My job, in addition to doing sort of the promotions stuff, you do — really Marketing 101 stuff — I created the first newsletter that would go to the retailers, to advise them of what would be in that month's comic books. Previously, it was just a list. But I would write little articles about each comic book that DC was publishing. Nobody else had done that in the direct-sales market before. We did that every month.

Bob: Well, there was no direct sales market prior to that.

Mike: Well, it had been going on for a few years, but, nobody had really paid attention to it, and then, I'd also manage DC's presence at the major comic book shows. In turn I would take the input that I got from fans and — more important — from retailers, back to editorial, back to Joe Orlando, primarily, and around '77 that started working its way into the comicbooks themselves. We started to pay attention to what was going on in the direct sales market. Previously DC's attitude was fans are just pimples on the butt of the reading public. One could argue that that was, and — if they still paid attention to the general public — that would still be true. During my two years I literally quadrupled DC's sales in the direct sales market, just by paying attention to it. Both ways, by representing the needs and desires of the fans and retailers to editorial and by representing the company to the fans and the retailers.

Bob: Not to skip over any of the important stuff you did, but eventually you left DC and returned to Chicago to found First Comics.



Warp #3, © First Comics

Mike: Well, there's a little bit of time between them. I had taken the job with the intention of staying either one or two years; certainly no more than two years. I had other things that I had wanted to accomplish. I had also made some promises to some people, particularly back in the social services field. Quite literally, a lawyer friend of mine, who was on the board of directors of one of this social service organizations, had called me to remind me that I was due back. That was fine, I went back. Remember the lawyer, because he's going to pop up in my life story in a minute.

Bob: I think I know part of this story already, but go on.

Mike: So I did that, and we created a few other social service programs. I have a real dedication to the youth social services field, political issues and all that as well. But, I'm still a fanboy and I really enjoyed my time at DC. Then Jim Steranko, of all people, had recommended to Rick Obidiah — who was the producer of the Organic Theater at that point — that Rick get a hold of me to help promote the re-launch of Warp. Warp had been tied up in litigation. Rick called me up, and explained who he was and that they were bringing Warp back. I already knew that part because, again, I have friends who were in the cast of the Organic Theater. The Organic Theater, by the way is a place where guys like Joe Mantegna and Denis Franz came from. It's really a major theater company. It was a hell of a blast working with Stuart Gordon and those people. So, I meet with Rick. He explained to the their plans for the revival of Warp and his main goal is to get the comic book fans and science fiction fans into the theater to be really excited about it. Because that could provide the framework that would keep the play alive in order to find its own audience. I agreed with that and we did that. Keeping in mind that Warp is really three plays, not just one. It's a major commitment to mount that production. So we did all of that, and somewhere along the way I turned to Obidiah, and said, "You know, this is such a solid, traditional comic book story, you could probably make a comic book out of this. He said, "OK, great, let's do that." I said, fine, and I became his consultant in terms of how to market that to DC or Marvel. We arranged for a premiere of Warp 2, which most New Yorkers hadn't seen because when it played on Broadway five or ten years earlier, it bombed after a week or two. People just didn't understand it. This was five years before Star Wars. People didn't understand what this stuff was all about. (Laughter) People were just dumbfounded. But the fans, who were now in the comic book business, were fascinated by it, so we held a special performance, a Saturday evening performance, during the Chicago ComicCon of Warp 2, which none of these people had seen. We knew full well, that if we played our cards right, we would get the interest of both DC and Marvel. I explained to Rick exactly how that would come out. Exactly how Paul Levitz (DC), would treat him, Exactly how Jim Shooter (Marvel), would treat him. Which essentially was that Paul would make all of these sort of offers — and I explained what those offers meant — and then that Jim would say, "Oh, Marvel's bigger and better, we'll beat DC." And that's exactly how it came down. But, before Rick actually went to New York to have those business meetings, for the licensing end of things, I told Rick, "There's something you should know. This is what the direct sales business is all about, and we could publish our own comics for the direct sales business." Essentially I was just talking about Warp at that time. "You know if you put the mechanics together, you should put some money into it and have a distribution system you can advertise your costs and do more books." Rick said, "No, no. That isn't what I want to do. I just want to license this stuff and sign the paychecks." I said, "Oh, you want money for this?"

(General laughter)

Bob: Oh, well that's different!

Mike: That's different. If you want to make money then this is what's going to happen; and I gave him sort of a hit list of the top 25 things that are going to happen during this negotiations. Rick looked at me and said, "Oh, you're an idiot. This is never going to happen. These people are professional business people they would never act like this." I said that the comic books business is a cottage industry. DC might be owned by Warner Communications, but it's certainly not in the driver's seat of Warner Communications. There's a movie studio and a record industry and the book publishers and somewhere way down on the list, there is DC Comics. It's really a cottage industry. So Rick went to New York and had the conversations. In the middle of the day that he got there, he calls me and said, "You're absolutely right. Every single thing on your list of the things that you predicted happened. Let's do it ourselves." He didn't totally throw in the towel, he continued negotiating with them in case we couldn't raise the money or we couldn't get off the ground. He didn't want to screw up the property, which was the right thing to do. He flew back from New York the following day, which was a lot, considering he's a New Yorker, and I came up with the name First Comics that next day and, boom, That's how First Comics started.

Bob: At first you came out with a number of very cool comics including, American Flagg by Howard Chaykin…

Mike: I had a marketing plan which was editorial driven. Which was, we would start off with Warp, because that was the property that everybody was interested in seeing, because the play was so hot and the industry was so hot on it. I really didn't have any plans or any belief that Warp was going to be a perennial title. Part of that overall plan was to take an artist who was pissed off at the comic book industry and bring him back into the fold and say, "Look, First Comics is so great, that we got, 'Blank' back. 'Blank' being Frank Brunner.

Next I wanted to bring back a comic by the people who created it. In this case it was E-Man with Joe Staton, who I wanted as my art director. By this point I had already done a comic book with Joe Staton. We had done a promotional comic book, called Weird Organic Tales for the Organic Theater. By this point Rick was no longer involved with the Organic Theater, but Joe Staton and Bruce Paterson were the artists on that 16-page promotional comic. So I offered Joe the art director job, now Joe's a swell guy and an enormously creative talent and I really wanted him as one of the founding fathers of First Comics. So he was already involved, let's see if we can get the rights to E-Man from Charlton. Which we did, we bought them out from Charlton under a plan that eventually Joe would reimburse us for our expenses, and then he would own it. Nick Cuti couldn't write it because he was editing over at DC and DC wouldn't give him dispensation to write for another publisher. Which is understandable. The third thing was a brand new, completely original comic from an established talent, which was Jon Sable Freelance, from Mike Grell. (Mike Grell was the CVA feature interview in 1997—ed.) The fourth book was Starslayer, which was an established book, but I wanted to put new talent on it, brand new talent. That's where John Ostrander came in. I'd know John Ostrander since about '71. He had co-written a play for the Organic Theater. He was an actor as well. While he didn't perform with the Organic Theater, he had performed at the Goodwin Theater, which is a more prestigious theater. I shouldn't say more prestigious, but an extremely prestigious theater. We brought in Lenin Deisol and Tim Truman to draw it. New talent — the public never heard of John Ostrander or Tim Truman. The fourth title proved that we could create new talent. The fifth comic was an extreme title. Something that DC or Marvel would not handle at that point in time, by an established guy. That's how we got to American Flagg by Howard Chaykin. Howard had quit the comics business. I had actually talked him back in. I'm not sure he's ever forgiven me for that.

(General Laughter)

Bob: I've spoken to Howard a number of times, and you're probably right.

Mike: The biggest problem that has always faced the comic book industry — is it a creative force where the creativity leads, or is it a commercial force? That's true for all commercial media, except for television. In comics, it's a little different. If you're an extremely successful comic book, you're still only going to make a certain amount of money. Hopefully, the creators will share fairly in that money. The publisher, at best, is only going to make a certain amount. But the merchandising has potential that can be very serious. As we've learned from everything since the Batman movie, and arguably the Batman TV show. (The licensing potential) is extraordinary. So, are you in the comic book licensing business, where you get the toys and TV, and the movie and the Underoos? Or are you in the comic book story telling business and you let that be the horse. What's the horse, what's the cart? Howard, who has spent most of the last 10 years or so in Hollywood, writing TV shows and that sort of thing, knows that. It's funny, he has worked for, really, the licensee end of things but, as a comic book creator, he wants to be a story teller. He's right that comic book stories are going to come when you are trying to write comic book stories, and not when you are trying to invent licensing deals. It's just that simple. Anyway, there was a sixth book that I had in the marketing plan that created First Comics. The sixth book was a title that was very extreme, like American Flagg — something that people like Marvel or DC wouldn't have published, and also done by people that nobody had heard of. That's where Mars by Mark Wheatley and Marc Hempel came in.

Bob: That was an amazing book.

Mike: Right. It really lost First Comics a lot of money in terms of the first print publishing itself. But in terms of prestige, in terms of getting people to see First Comics as a creative force. You'd expect something as creative as American Flagg from Howard Chaykin, but you had never heard or Wheatley and Hempel at that point. To see that we could develop something like that; that really made people take notice of us.

Bob: The thing that I loved about American Flagg was that, at that point, I was a young man. I was probably in my early 20s I believe, and it was the first comic I ever remember reading — or at least the first comic in a very, very long time — that assumed I got the joke. It assumed I understood what was going on. It didn't paint me a picture from the ground up with every single detail in it. Howard left stuff out, because he meant for you to get it.

Mike: We didn't footnote the book to death.

Bob: Right. And Mars was amazing because there were no captions in that first couple of books. It was just the story. There was nothing beyond that.

Mike: I have such enormous respect for Mark Wheatley and Marc Hempel. We did Breathtaker together at DC several years later — same thing. I have such respect for them. They have such a unique and original view, and still there 'til this day. Anyway, that's the First Comic story, and I could go on, and on and on.

Bob: I recall a storyline in Sable that revolved in part around smuggling information out of Vietnam, that peripherally involved you. I remember because as I read the story I recalled having read about the incident when I was younger. Some time after that I spoke to Mike Grell about it in an interview. I told him that I recalled the incident, or at least the factual elements of the incident. Which is when he told me that you were involved in the incident. Could you talk about that?

Mike: In 1969, 1970 — I spent three years working for Abbie Hoffman, in addition to all this other crap that I was doing

Bob: (Laughter) Oh my God!

Mike: One of those years was spent on the conspiracy trial, the Chicago Seven trial, which was really the Chicago Eight, but we were high, we couldn't count.

(General Laughter)

Mike: Part of that was in 1969, I think it was August — don't hold me to that — it was very clear, that the North Vietnamese were interested, as a gesture, in releasing some POWs. They wouldn't release them to the U.S. government; they wanted to release them to the peace movement. Rennie Davis was one of the defendants, went out with Bill Kunstler, to ultimately Vietnam and brought back those first POWs. I was involved in that, and mind you I was 19 at the time. I was involved in that in terms of first making the arrangements and all that other stuff. I was also handling a lot of the political activities around that, including in assisting in smuggling out of letters from other POWs towards being released. Smuggling those letters out of Hanoi through Germany to New York where I was waiting — well I wasn't waiting, I was an intimate part of that — but it was my responsibility to get those letters out after that. So that was kind of cool. Now all of a sudden I'm James Bond. We're smuggling these letters out, and doing the right thing, because I'm involved in getting the first POWs ever out of the Vietnam War. At the same time behind the Hanoi government's back and as well as behind the U.S. government's back smuggling out all of these letters of POWs who weren't being released. Yeah, I'm real proud of that one.

Bob: Hey, I'm just happy that I know you and that you did it.

Mike: (Laughter)

Bob: I swear I was reading that comic and saying, "Damn! I remember reading about this." Then when I spoke to Grell, he said, "Yeah that was Mike Gold that was doing that." Which blew my mind because at that time you were just this guy I knew who was doing funny books.

Mike: Yeah, there's a lot of stuff in my background that didn't make it into my 30-second resume, and that's part of it. Obviously, if there's one thing that I'm most proud of in my life, it is this. It's right up there with working with early childhood education, which I'm really proud of as well.

Bob: Then you eventually left First Comics and went back to DC.

Mike: Yeah, for two good reasons. I disagreed with the way the company was being run. Now there were five board members. I was one, our business manager was another. Our business manager and I were out voted on almost everything, three to two. My problem was, we'd be having this cash-flow problem, or in some cases we'd be having some real money problems. Instead of getting better terms from the printer or from the engravers, or what have you, they just wanted to not pay the writers and artists.

Bob: Oh sure, instead of trying to get better deals, let's screw the creative staff. That's pretty typical.

Mike: Right. Which is a time-honored tradition.

Bob: One that still goes on today.

Mike: Not one that I care to be a part of. The business manager had quit the company for a variety of reasons. The other three people on the board were Rick Obidiah, who was the publisher, and a lawyer who was the lawyer from the social services agency that wanted me to leave DC back in 1978 to go back and work in the social services field. And a business man. We just disagreed and those disagreements became very emotional because these guys, the writers and artists that were talking about were — almost all of them — friends of mine. Those that hadn't been friends of mine, pretty much become friends of mine, and most of them are friends of mine to this day. And they were getting screwed.

Bob: It's funny, a few years ago I did an interview with Jeff Rovin on the rise and fall of Atlas/Seaboard comics (which ran in the 1998 edition of CVA — ed.), and the story he told is the story you're telling today.

Bob: Yeah, it's a time-honored tradition. Paul Levitz and I made that comparison once, comparing Rick Obidiah to other publishers in the history of comics. I don't think that that's necessarily fair, I should point out, but it was just the starting point of that conversation. I have no ill will towards Rick. I don't think we've seen each other for five or six years, but we had a very pleasant time. So what happened was, I was very disenfranchised from First because my friends weren't getting paid, and also from a business perspective, if you don't produce good comics, you're not going to sell, and if you're not paying people, you not going to produce good comics. It was a bad business decision, it was a bad personal decision. I went on a leave of absence with the full belief and understanding that the minute that it was announced that I was on a leave of absence that I would get job offers. I just wanted to see what would happen and see what options I would have in my life, including outside of comics. Well, I go on a leave of absence I take drive up to Upper Peninsula, Michigan. In the beginning of October it's really beautiful, it's just gorgeous, and spent a week just chilling out literally, because it's pretty cold up at Lake Superior. It was great, just beautiful. I let go of a lot of bad energy, came back, turned on the answering machine, and I had seven job offers. I had 25 messages, and seven of them were job offers. The first message and the last message on that tape were from Dick Giordano. "Let's talk." So I'm thinking how much of the stuff that I pulled off at First Comics which I was very proud of could I actually accomplish over at DC. So I flew out there and we cut ourselves a deal, and I went off to work at DC. Where I was hired — at that time — a senior editor, then became director of development, and then added group editor to that so I was director of development/group editor.

Bob: So you were back at DC for a number of years where you brought Mike Grell back in…

Mike: Oh, a lot, Mike Baron — almost everybody I had worked with at First Comics I had worked with at DC, and many, many other people, as well. So it was the best of both worlds for me, I was in hog heaven; I worked with all of these wonderfully creative people, including my old buddies from First Comics. I was thrilled.

Bob: Ultimately you left DC…

Mike: …After seven years…

Bob: …After seven years, and went back into the retail end of comics with Mike

Raub. (Mike Raub was interviewed in the 2000 edition of CVA, offering his view of the retail end of the business—ed.)

Mike: Well, there's some stuff in between. The last year I spent at DC, I knew and I had told them — both Giordano and the head of personnel at Warner Bros. that my intention was to leave at the end of my seventh year. So I spent that last year pretty much closing out the projects that I was involved in. I did a few special new things, some as a favor to Giordano, some because it was my job, and some out of loyalty to the writers and artists that worked with me, not to leave them hanging. So, I spent a year of time winding all that up, with the full understanding that at the end of that year I would be leaving the company and limiting my work in comics. At that time Image Comics was starting up and I knew that Todd McFarlane had made an offer to Mike Grell. Mike had made me part of that package, although, as long as I was working at DC, I wasn't working on any of that stuff. The minute I was gone from DC, I did work on it. So, essentially, I went, although not full-time, from DC to working with Grell at Image Comics (Jim Valentino, Image co-founder and current publisher, and Whilce Portacio, Image co-founder, were both interviewed in 1999 for CVA—ed.) Now, at that same time, I also was working with Mike Raub on this retailing venture. At the very same time, my career went back to the marketing end of comics, but with one foot in marketing and one foot in editorial. So I was doing both. After the Image stuff we packaged some books for Acclaim — what is now Acclaim Comics, but was Valiant at the time, and a couple of other publishers. I worked with some other talent, but almost all of it was with Grell. Out of friendship, really. It wasn't my main gig, by any stretch of the imagination. I was doing a lot of media consulting work at that time, too, that was completely outside of comics. I was having a good time.

Bob: Could you talk a little bit about some of the stuff that you're doing right now. I know that you're doing the "how-to-do comics" books with Frank McLaughlin.

Mike: That's right. Our first one came out earlier this year (2000), How to Draw those Bodacious Bad Babes of Comics.

Bob: Yeah, I've seen that on the stands.

Wasteland #6, © DC Comics, Inc.

Mike: It's great fun, and our publisher is very happy with the sales, and we just finished our second one, which is How to Draw those Mad Malevolent Monsters of Comics (the title may change). These are obviously very market driven. I don't know if we'll do a third one or not. The relationship with the publisher — well with a couple of people on the publisher's staff — is not what I would like. I'm not trying to speak for Frank here, but comics is a very unique business. It doesn't go by any of the other business models they teach you at the Harvard School of Business. That's one of the reasons that comics has had so much problems in the last 10 years. All these outsiders have come in and said, "Wow, look how much money is being made. If we just applied real business standards to comics, then the world would be a better place." Invariably, those people — each and every one of them — will fail. Our relationship with our publisher is that they are not thinking of comics as any other business. We should be presenting things a certain way, and the book should look like any other book. They shouldn't. They should have a certain type of energy you get out of comics. I write to that energy — and they don't have any problem with that; Frank draws to that energy — and they he don't have any problem with that. But, when you package it all together, and you lay it out right and all this other stuff, Mark Wheatley is the colorist; they didn't understand it.

Bob: It doesn't look like it's supposed to look.

Mike: I have an art director who is fighting it very, very aggressively. Luckily that's Frank's job to deal with that, because she (the art director) just doesn't understand comics, and you can tell she doesn't like it. The obvious visual sexism of comics offended her, and I understand that and I'm sympathetic to her.

Bob: Where do you see comics going in the next century; or at the very least over the next decade? I've just been reading how Marvel is probably going to run out of money before the end of the year (2000). Is that like a real thing, or are people just panicking?

Mike: Well, maybe. It's really possible.

Bob: What would happen if that happened? I mean, if they really did run out of money? Do they simply stop publishing? Do the Marvel characters just go away? Does somebody else step in and buy them for pennies?

Mike: Any of those things could happen. Most likely the latter, and probably not for pennies, probably for real money. They own thousands and thousands of characters. I think that we got so caught up in selling to a fail-safe audience, selling to the fans, that we forgot that comics is inherently at the entry point of children's medium. It doesn't have to be up and down the stream, but as an entry level point you have to be producing comics for kids, and right now only Archie Comics is doing that.

Bob: It's kind of funny that you should say that because I've been having this conversation for the past several weeks with people, and it's not so much a comic book discussion, it's a sports discussion. I'm very angry with Major League Baseball (and that includes the owners and the networks) over the fact that the World Series started at 8 at night here on the East Coast. Now I understand that part of that reason was to make it accessible to the West Coast. First of all, this year (2000), it happened to be strictly a New York City game, so my feeling was, screw the West Coast.

Mike: Yeah, but the networks can't change the schedule…

Bob: Yeah, I understand that…

Mike: …And by the way, you happen to be 100 percent right because nobody outside the New York area happened to watch the damn thing. It was the lowest ratings ever.

Bob: …By putting it that late, they took a very short-term stance, and determined to make a bunch of money this year with prime-time sponsorships. However, what they are doing, and I don't think they understand this. My 9-year-old son got to watch a total of three innings of the entire series.

Mike: Think about who you're talking to. I grew up on the North side of Chicago, to me—playing baseball at night is sacrilegious.

Bob: This is true! Right! Exactly! (Laughter)

Mike: It's supposed to be out in real grass, in a real stadium…

Bob: …In the middle of the afternoon!

Mike: …In real air…

Bob: So unless I make a concerted effort to expose my son to baseball, take him to games, and let him stay up past his bedtime to watch games, let him stay up to watch the World Series — and there are people like myself who are not going to do that — you're going to wind up with an entire generation of young kids who are going to grow up not being used to watching baseball. By the time they get to be my age, with children my son's age, not only will they not be watching baseball; their children will not be watching baseball either. Nobody is going to be sitting in the stands. It won't matter if the clubs are giving away bricks of gold; nobody is going to be watching baseball anymore, because they simply got out of the habit. This is exactly what comics has done. I started reading comics in the early '60s. Spider-Man was in high school, and I was in grade school. I grew up and he didn't. I wound up graduating college before he did. Eventually I was reading comics staring characters that were younger than me. Meanwhile the entire industry grew up at the same time, and there were no more kid comics. When they then discovered this, they had to go back and try to create comicbooks for kids. They wound up doing Power Pack.

Mike: Power Pack was a comic about kids, not for kids.

Bob: Right, exactly; and they were doing it wrong.

Mike: I liked the original Power Pack. I'm not putting the book down, but the concept was not—"The Comicbook Industry, the Next Generation," and that's what we need, and we still need that now, and now we need it damn fast. The idea here is, not just to have comics for kids. You need superhero comics, that kids can understand, that 9-year-olds, 10-year-olds, 11-year-olds can understand. Then, as they grow older, they get fed along into the comics that are for teenagers, and for young adults.

Bob: I went from Archie, Charlton, and Dell, to Marvel and DC, and ultimately to First, and Image and others. The problem is that I grew up, and all of a sudden, I'm older than comics, and the audience is younger. I remember being at a comicbook convention in the 1980s, and someone asked Chris Claremont how long he had been writing X-Men. Chris asked how old the kid was, and the answer was 18. Chris responded, "A year longer than you've been alive."

Mike: And that's okay, I guess, but if the object is for the X-Men to become icons, which they finally have, then the X-Men should never leave those 11-year-olds in the dust. Never. I think that what the comic industry needs from this point forward — what's it's needed for the last five or six years — is a new philosophy. It has needed one desperately the day everybody decided that publishing alternate covers and foil covers was more important than publishing good comics. What we've needed ever since that point in time is a philosophy that reaches both audiences; that reaches the traditional comic book fan market, which is a broad market, but thin. It reaches a wide range of age, but very few people. And also an entry-level audience, that provides superhero comics that heroic adventure, that heroic fantasy. You don't have to have a cape and a costume to be a superhero comic — Jon Sable was a superhero comic, so was American Flagg, so was The Question. I mean, The Question was a great book and so was American Flagg, but those were not books, for 10- and 11-year-olds. You need to have heroic characters for that market; and kids had to be able to afford it. By afford it, I'm not referring to the price of comics; $2.00, $3.00; whatever. I'm talking about the price of entry. If you're a Batman fan, and you like watching Batman on TV; if you're an X-Men fan, you like the movie, and you find a comic book store - which is hard enough - and you look at all this X-Men stuff, and you look at all this Batman stuff, and you realize that if you want it all, if you want to stay on top of it, if you want to get enough of it so that you understand the story, you're making a commitment that 12-year-olds, maybe even 15-year-olds, cannot afford every month.

Bob: That's because the publishers think that if one Spider-Man title is selling 100,000 copies a month, and they publish 10 Spider-Man titles they are going to sell 1,000,000 copies. No! They are going to sell 10,000 of each title, and the total number of Spider-Man books will be just a little over 100,000.

Mike: I know of ways of doing that, of creating an industry that goes along those lines. It partially embraces everything that's great about comics today, with everything that was great about comics 10 year ago, and 20 years ago, all three of those points in time. Therefore, I'm certain that other people who have that same type of history of the business end of comics know that as well. I don't understand why it's not being done. I understand why I'm not doing it. I'm not in that line of work right now, but I don't understand why others are not doing it. Every once in a while I ask them — most of, a lot of my friends are in the comic business — these conversations come up incessantly. You go to the National Cartoonist Society dinners here in Connecticut, and there always Mort Walker (Beetle Bailey), and those guys, but all the comic book guys sit at like two tables and all we talk about is why is it all going to hell in a hand basket? Everybody agrees what the problem is, and they sort of agree what the solution is. Why it is not being implemented? I don't know. My best guess is that outsiders keep on coming in, and they all go, "Oh, I know how to save comics." Invariably they all make the same mistakes and it winds up going up in flames. You need people who understand the business of comics, who understand the history of the business of comics — not who drew Spider-Man 20 years ago, but how they sold Spider-Man 20 years ago.

Bob: I remember that when Mike Raub was starting to expand his comic book store business (Dream Factory) into the beginnings of a chain. His business model was that he wanted to hire two people to run every store. One guy who was a comic book fan and knew what comics were about and a business person at an equal level who knew little or nothing about comics, but knew how to run a small business.

Mike: The reason that Mike, as long as he was running his comic book stores, had run successful comic book stores, and he is running his own comic book store to this day. There was only the brief period during the CIE (Comics International Entertainment) period when he wasn't running it, but if you take that out of the mix, when he was running the stores which was from 1985 to the year 2000 and counting. He ran it not only according to the fan knowledge that he had, but also according to the business knowledge that he had as a broadcaster. Mike and I are similar in that regard. Although Mike was in the broadcasting business longer than I. That's a very hardcore business. By bringing those — I don't want to say traditional business values, but nobody is better at promotion than people who succeed in radio. You know promotion and marketing backwards and forwards. He brought those types of values to his comic book stores, and that's why, as long as he was running it - again, to this very day - he's been successful. You have to bring that type of philosophy, that type of knowledge, knowing both the business of comics, the history of the business of comics, and real-world attributes into the industry and the trick is, the history of the business of comics is the horse. It's what's going to get you down that road. You need the other two things there too, but what's going to get you down that road is an understanding of how it's worked before and how you can update and apply those types of techniques.

Bob: It's not so much about selling, but about marketing. How do you best position this thing? How do you see the growing interactivity of electronic entertainment affecting comics? There are so many people who have cited video games as the death knell of comics…

Mike: Oh crap. I don't believe it. Let me tell you why. They used to say the death knell of comics was television, remember it was the 1950s. You weren't born.

Bob: Yes I was.

Mike: Well, you were a small child. Well. In 1950 you weren't, and I was.

Bob: Okay, fine. Be that way.

Mike. I was born in 1950. In the mid-50s. When you were born, comic sales were tanking. Of course today, we'd give our left nut to get those types of sales.

Bob: Right!

Mike: But in those days, we were doing very, very poorly, a lot of publishers were going out of business. Yes, there were all these problems with Wertham (Fredric Wertham, author of Seduction of the Innocent)—and all this other stuff, but Wertham wasn't the death knell of comics, Wertham was just the death knell of the creativity of comics, for a short period of time. What had been selling comics was the distribution system, the fact that there were corner grocery stores, each small town had their own little newsstand that was reached by every magazine ever published. Those mom and pop operations were going out of business, and being replaced by big supermarkets, big drug stores, and mostly big shopping malls. They made that transition. It wasn't television that was hurting comic sales; it was the failure of the distribution system that we had in the 1950s. Now we had a big collapse of the comics industry or the comics distribution in the early 70s. Same thing. We were making the transition from the last vestige of those mom and pop stores into the big shopping malls. In the big shopping malls you couldn't buy a comic book. Walden Books didn't start carrying comics until much later than that. The big bookstores in the shopping malls didn't carry comics in most of their outlets in the 1970s. There weren't enough bookstores in shopping malls in those days to carry that weight anyway. Ultimately, what saved the business was the direct sales end of things. Now, for 20 years we've had the direct sales thing sailing. That collapsed because of greed, speculation, and the publishers just trying to play it safe, and believing that alternate covers were more important than the story. Of course I'm oversimplifying here. The people in the industry at that time knew the problems with that philosophy. The newcomers were creating a lot of pressure along those same ways to compete. And all the air went out of the business, and still hasn't returned. Our best argument is that it's leveled off where less than a dozen regular ongoing monthly titles are selling more than 50,000 copies in direct sales. That's a crime. What you have to do is adjust to the 21st century marketing philosophy and retailing concept the way that we adjusted to the direct sales market in the late 70s and with the loss of the mom and pop stores in the 1950s. Every time we blamed it on something else. We're blaming it on video games today and on computers. We were blaming it on movies and Star Wars and that sort of stuff in the 70s. There was this big implosion at DC in '78, and we were blaming it on television before that — now you're getting it all for free. For crying out loud, during the Depression, when nobody had any money, and radio was free, you took whatever little money you had and went out and bought a radio because it was an ongoing source of free entertainment in the house, that's when the comics industry was created. That's when it got off the ground. That's when I'm not sure we've ever had such great days as we had during that period of time, when during the Depression and World War II. Nobody had any money. Hell, during the Depression we didn't even have any paper! And everything that you had, sold. If comics could sell in the 1930s with reprint of newspaper strips and sell like nobody's business, and nobody had any money, then comics can sell in the 21st century. Blaming it on video games is a copout. (Laughter)

Bob: Fine, I totally believe you. I can buy that. I'll use Spider-Man as an example because I'm a Spider-Man fan. Stan wrote the most amazing stuff in Spider-Man. He spent over 100 issues with essentially the same cast. He'd introduce new villains every once in a while, but for all intents and purposes it was the same core cast of characters, and you really and truly got to know who these people were. Then he left and Roy Thomas, Gerry Conway, and others followed him, and you wound up with writers doing what Stan did, without understanding why Stan was doing what he was doing it. Then it was just a shadow of what Stan had been doing. I honestly believe that the first person to come along who was really able to write Stan Lee's Spider-Man after Stan was Roger Stern. Sterno was writing stuff that I remember reading, and going "Who is this guy? He's great!"

Mike: I agree with you, I believe that Roger's contribution to Spider-Man in particular was one of the most under-rated achievements in comics. Although I have to tell you that Brian Bendis, not just because of The Ultimate Spider-

Alter Ego #2, © First Comics

Man, but many, many of his other books, is one of the best writers I've seen come down the pike ever.

Bob: Could you talk a little more about the future of the industry?

Mike: The real crises in comics right now is the profitability is so negative right now that it is very hard to attract the type of money its going to take in order to save it. My response to that is that the original comic publishers in the 1930s and the successful comic book publishers, many of the successful comic book publishers since that point in time didn't have a hell of a lot of money either. They weren't destitute, but they didn't have a hell of a lot of money either. What it takes is to get people out of their damn suits...and get them into real-world publishing. There are magazines that are profitable, that have lower budgets than comicbooks — it's very expensive to produce comic books — and higher cover prices that can make it. You can save this industry, but it takes saving now. We can make it to the 21st century, but it's going to take, if not the things that I've talked about, then something else to make it work. It needs saving.

Bob: Do you think that the success of the X-Men movie will help recussitate comics? Or could we wind up with no comics, but just movies about comics?

Mike: Absolutely. Well, sure, because comic characters are not unique to comics. We had the Scarlet Pimpernel long before we had comics. We had Zorro long before we had comics. These are superheroes. The X-Men movie could create comicbook readers except that if you're 12-years-old and dig the X-Men movie and you want to read the X-Men comic book, you'd have to find a comic book store. Then if you found a comic book store you'd have to figure out what amongst all those 18,000 different X-Men titles that are on the wall are the ones that you could understand. Chances are that you're going to walk away bewildered, assuming that you can find a store in the first place, without reading any of them. But if you do, you are not going to get a satisfying experience because it takes 400 issues to understand the story. Not even 400 issues of the same book, but a total 400 issues across a dozen different books, and you don't know which dozen books.

Bob: When John Byrne went over to Superman in 1986 I tried to read those titles, but you had to read all four titles and John wasn't writing and drawing all four of them. I read the first couple that John did and loved them, but when I got to the first non-John Byrne book the art was so different than John's that it was jarring. I couldn't read it, so I decided to only read John's books and screw the continuity, because John was doing the best stuff.

Mike: My daughter is a big X-Man fan, and she became an assistant manager of a comic book store. Then she went off to college and had a life. Now, she still reads comics, she reads Wonder Woman and five or six other titles. She'd love to be able to read the X-Men. She'd love to be able to go back. At the time she stopped reading X-Men I think that there were only three or four X-Men books being published or at least three or four that were tied together. She could handle that although that's quite a commitment in and of itself. A 12-year-old couldn't handle a four-book-a-month commitment in order to understand the X-Men but she was like 16 or 18 at the time. She had a job, so she could do it. She was working in a comic book store; of course she was doing it. Once she had college expenses and that sort of stuff it really wasn't worth not only her time, but her money as well. So now, she's got the time, she's pretty much got the money — to the extent that any of us do — and she would like to read the X-Men. And she can't! Because there isn't an X-Men title for her to follow; where she would only have to read one or two or maybe three. She doesn't really want to read more than that. Therefore, the X-Men, which she always enjoyed, is something that is denied to her. There are thousands of potential readers who are like her.

Bob: I would love to read Spider-Man again. Hell, I'd love to read all the Marvel titles that I used to read, but I'll never again be able to afford to buy all of those titles anymore. What I may end up doing, if I'm lucky enough, is go back and read Spider-Man, and I probably won't even be able to read all of Spider-Man titles, but perhaps the core books.

Mike: This is the philosophy behind The Ultimate Marvel line. This re-do of Spider-Man where you only have to read that one book. Ultimate X-Men comes out next month (December 2000), the same thing. Then they have an Ultimate Team-Up book. Ah-ha! Which means that there are a million other characters, which means that The Ultimate Marvel Universe can instantly expand to a million different characters. You can see, unless they're extremely careful The Ultimate Marvel line is just going to wind up being the same as the regular Marvel line, with too many interrelated titles.

Bob: It's going to be Marvel 2099, The New Universe…

Mike: Right, but they do have the opportunity to avoid that sand trap, and I hope they do. That doesn't quite meet what I was talking about earlier, but it's very close, and the first book that they have, The Ultimate Spider-Man, is extremely well done, and that's really the most important thing.

CVA GRADING GUIDE

In David Brins science fiction–fantasy novel, The Practice Effect, things improve with use. You start with a crudely made tool and keep using it until it becomes a fine instrument. If our world worked that way, you could read your golden age comics as often as you liked and they would just get better looking each time. Unfortunately, our world does not work that way, and reading your comics (along with just about everything else) causes comics to deteriorate.

Even if you could protect your comics from external light, heat, cold, moisture, pressure and everything else, you couldn't protect them from their own paper. Most comic books were printed on pulp paper, which has a high acid content. This means that the paper slowly turns brittle with age, no matter what you do to it, short of special museum-style preservation.

Very old, well-preserved comics are coveted collectors items. In most cases, people did not save their comic books for future generations. They read them and discarded them. Comic books were considered harmless ephemera for children. When these children outgrew their comics, their parents often threw them away. If everybody kept all of their comics, comics would not be valuable because everybody would have them scattered about the house!

The value of any comic depends on scarcity, popularity and condition. Scarcity increases with age and popularity depends on the whim of the public — only condition automatically decreases with age. Newer comics are generally available in near-mint condition, so newer comics in lesser condition have little collector potential. However, older comics are scarce, so they are still collectible in less than near-mint condition, but the value is obviously less. This is a basic tenet of all collectibles. A car is more valuable with its original paint. A baseball card is more valuable if it has not been marred by bicycle spokes. Coke bottles, stamps, coins, and toys in good condition are all more valuable than their abused counterparts. Comic books are no exception.

New comic book collectors should learn how to assess the prospective value of a comic in order to protect themselves from being fleeced by unscrupulous dealers or hucksters. Yet, a majority of dealers, especially store owners, can be considered reliable judges of comic grade. Because comic retail may be their primary source of income, certain dealers are particularly adept at noticing comic book imperfections, especially in issues they intend to purchase. As such, hobbyists and collectors must understand that dealers need to make a minimum profit on their investments. Buying collectible comics entails certain risks. Therefore, dealers must scrutinize a comic to determine if the particular book will stand a chance of resale. Well-preserved comics are invariably more desirable to dealers because they are more desirable to collectors.

There are eight standard comic grades: mint, near mint, very fine, fine, very good, good, fair, and poor. Clearly, these eight grades could be split into even finer categories when haggling over an exceptionally rare or coveted Golden Age comic. In most cases, however, comic books can be evaluated using these eight standard grades. The values listed in Comics Values Annual are all for comics in "near mint" condition. The grading/price chart given at the back of this book should be used to adjust this price for comics in different grades.

Mint

Finding new comics in true mint condition can be difficult. Finding old comics in mint condition is almost impossible. Mint condition comics usually fetch prices higher than price guide listings. Mint comics can sell for 120 percent or more of Comics Values Annual listed prices. The reason for this is the strict criteria reserved for mint comics.

Mint comics are perfect comics and allow no room for imperfections. Pages and covers must be free of discoloration, wear, and wrinkles. A mint comic is one that looks like it just rolled off the press. Staples and spine must meet perfectly without cover "rollover." The cover must be crisp, bright, and trimmed perfectly. The staples must not be rusted and the cover should not have any visible creases.

The interior pages of a mint comic are equally crisp and new. A mint comic must not show any signs of age or decay. Because of the paper stock used on many older comics, acid and oxygen cause interior pages to yellow and flake. It is much harder to find pre-1970 mint comics because of inferior storage techniques and materials. In the early days of collecting, few people anticipated that the very boxes and bags in which they stored their comics were contributing to decay. Acid from bags, backing boards, and boxes ate away at many comics.

Near Mint

A near mint comic and a mint comic are close siblings, with their differences slight, even to an experienced eye. Most of the new comics on the shelf of the local comic shop are in near mint condition. These are comics that have been handled gingerly to preserve the original luster of the book.

Near mint comics are bright, clean copies with no major or minor defects. Slight stress lines near the staples and perhaps a very minor printing defect are permissible. Corners must still be sharp and devoid of creases. Interior pages of newsprint stock should show almost no discernible yellowing. Near mint comics usually trade for 100 percent of the suggested Comics Values Annual listed prices.

Very Fine

A very fine comic is one that is routinely found on the shelves and back issue bins of most good direct market comic shops. This grade comic has few defects, none of them major. Stress around the staples of a very fine comic are visible but not yet radical enough to create wrinkles. Both the cover and interior pages should still be crisp and sharp, devoid of flaking and creases. Interior pages may be slightly yellowed from age.

Most high-quality older comics graded as very fine can obtain 80-90 percent of Comics Values Annual listed prices. Newer comics graded as very fine get about 70-85 percent because many near mint copies probably exist. Despite that, very fine comics are desirable for most collectors.

Fine

Fine comics are often issues that may have been stored carefully under a bed or on a shelf by a meticulous collector. This grade of comic is also very desirable because it shows little wear and retains much of its original sharpness. The cover may be slightly off center from rollover. The cover retains less of its original gloss and may even possess a chip or wrinkle. The comers should be sharp but may also have a slight crease. Yellowing begins to creep into the interior pages of a comic graded as fine.

Fine comics are respectable additions to collections and sell for about 40-60 percent of the listed prices.

Very Good

A very good comic may have been an issue passed around or read frequently. This grade is the common condition of older books. Its cover will probably have lost some luster and may have two or three creases around the staples or edges. The corners of the book may begin to show the beginnings of minor rounding and chipping, but it is by no means a damaged or defaced comic. Comics in very good condition sell for about 30-40 percent of Comics Values Annual listed prices.

Good

A good comic is one that has been well read and is beginning to show its age. Although both front and back covers are still attached, a good grade comic may have a number of serious wrinkles and chips. The corners and edges of this grade comic may show clear signs of rounding and flaking. There should be no major tears in a good comic nor should any pages be clipped out or missing. Interior pages may be fairly yellowed and brittle. Good comics sell for about 15-25 percent of the Comics Values Annual listed prices.

Fair

A fair comic is one that has definitely seen better days and has considerably limited resale value for most collectors. This comic may be soiled and damaged on the cover and interior. Fair comics should be completely intact and may only be useful as a comic to lend to friends. Fair comics sell for about 10-20 percent of the Comics Values Annual listed prices.

Poor

Comics in poor condition are generally unsuitable for collecting or reading because they range from damaged to unrecognizable. Poor comics may have been water damaged, attacked by a small child, or worse, perhaps, gnawed on by the family pet! Interior and exterior pages may be cut apart or missing entirely. A poor comic sells for about 5-15 percent of the Comics Values Annual listed price.

Sniffing Out Grades

Despite everything that is mentioned about comic grading, the process remains relative to the situation. A comic that seems to be in very good condition may actually be a restored copy. A restored copy is generally considered to be in between the grade it was previous to restoration and the grade it has become. Many collectors avoid restored comics entirely.

Each collector builds his collection around what he believes is important. Some want every issue of a particular series or company. Others want every issue of a favorite artist or writer. Because of this, many collectors will purchase lower-grade comics to fill out a series or to try out a new series. Mint and near mint comics are usually much more desirable to hard-core collectors. Hobbyists and readers may find the effort and cost of collecting only high-grade comics financially prohibitive.

Getting artists or writers to autograph comics has also become a source of major dispute. Some collectors enjoy signed comics and others consider those very comics defaced! The current trends indicate that most collectors do enjoy signed comics. A signature does not usually change the grade of the comic.

As mentioned, comic grading is a subjective process that must be agreed upon by the buyer and seller. Buyers will often be quick to note minor defects in order to negotiate a better price. Sellers are sometimes selectively blind to their comic's defects. Comics Values Annual:2001 provides this grading guide as a protection for both parties.

CVA GRADING GUIDE

Grading comics is an objective art. This grading guide outlines the many conditions you should look for when purchasing comics, from the highest grade and top condition to the lowest collectible grade and condition. Your own comics will fall into one of these categories. A more complete description and our comments on comics grades can be found inside. We would like to point out, however, that no reader or advertiser is required to follow this or any other standard. All prices in Comics Values Annual are for comics in Near Mint condition. Happy collecting!

Mint: Perfect, pristine, devoid of any trace of wear or printing or handling flaws. Covers must be fully lustrous with sharply pointed corners. No color fading. Must be well centered. Many "rack" comics are not "Mint" even when new.

Near Mint: Almost perfect with virtually no wear. No significant printing flaws. Covers must be essentially lustrous with sharp corners. Spine is a tight as new. In older comics, minimal color fading is acceptable, as is slight aging of the paper. Most price guides, including CVA, quote prices in this grade.

Very Fine: Well preserved, still pleasing in appearance. Small signs of wear, most particularly around the staples. Most luster is readily visible. Corners may no longer be sharp, but are not rounded. Typical of a comic read only a few times and then properly stored.

Fine: Clean, presentable, with noticeable signs of wear. Some white may show through enamel around staples, and moderate rounding of corners. No tape or writing damage. Book still lies flat.

Very Good: A well worn reading copy with some minor damage such as creasing, small tears or cover flaking. Some discoloration may be evident, with obvious wear around the staples. Little luster remains, and some rolling of the spine may be seen when comic is laid flat on the table.

Good: A fully intact comic with very heavy wear. Tears, cover creases and flaking, and rolled spine will all be evident. No tape repairs present. Only very scarce or valuable issues are collected in this state.

The adjoining price table shows the prices for the other collectible grades which correspond to any "near mint" price given in this book.
